ANNOUNCEMENT

National Institutes of Health Grant Opportunity

The US National Institutes of Health is seeking grant proposals investigating the role of religion in children’s and adolescents’ risky behaviors. Relevant research questions include methodological issues (e.g., definitions and measures of religiosity, measurement of risky behavior) as well as mechanistic issues regarding the development of religious beliefs, motivational influences behind religious beliefs and behaviors, and the role of genetics. Contextual issues, such as family structure, parental religious beliefs & practices, and others also are relevant to the grant.

The grant will fund up to $275,000 in direct costs and is open to public or private institutions as well as for-profit and non-for-profit organizations, governmental agencies, and others.

Mental health researchers and clinicians are becoming increasingly aware of the relevance of spiritual resources and concerns in the practice of psychotherapy. Spiritual issues are important from the perspective of respecting the diversity of the needs, presentations, expectations and personal preferences of psychotherapy clientele.

There is substantial evidence, for example, that many medical and mental health patients desire that spiritual resources and concerns be accounted for and integrated into treatment decisions. There is growing evidence that incorporating spiritual concerns and issues into psychotherapy enhances the meaningfulness of the process and the efficacy of outcomes.

The Journal of Clinical Psychology invites papers to be presented in a special issue. Papers evaluating theoretical, empirical and practical aspects of integrating spirituality into the practice of psychotherapy are sought. Case studies are not sought.

Examples of topics that may be included in this special issue include:

- The role of spiritual factors in the development of mental health problems
- The role of spiritual factors in the treatment of mental health problems
- Methodological issues in researching spiritual factors in psychotherapy
- Evaluations of spiritually-integrated approaches to psychotherapy

Manuscripts should be submitted to the journal via its online website.

Our Mission...

Division 36, Psychology of Religion

- Promotes the application of psychological research methods and interpretive frameworks to diverse forms of religion and spirituality;
- encourages the incorporation of the results of such work into clinical and other applied settings;
- and fosters constructive dialogue and interchange between psychological study and practice, on the one hand, and religious perspectives and institutions on the other.

The division is strictly nonsectarian and welcomes the participation of all persons, without regard to personal faith, who view religion as a significant factor in human functioning.

The division’s quarterly Newsletter contains original articles, book reviews, announcements, and news of interest to division members.
