- Update on Division Activities
- Initiative regarding assistance for professionals working with children and youth affected by the Russian-Ukrainian War
  - Information was presented about a project initiated by Member-at-Large Elena Grigorenko on the development of a website that would provide resources for psychological professionals working with children, youth, and families affected by the Russian-Ukrainian War (e.g., assessing trauma and distress in children). Discussion with APA about hosting the website is ongoing. Also, the recent call in the Division Newsletter and on the Listserv for resources has had a great response. The hope is that this website would be available for professionals in crisis situations, however, details of what and how this will happen are yet to be settled.
  - Michael Lamb raised discussion that the Division has had little previous outreach regarding crises in other contexts (e.g., Syria) and that it is important that this effort be broad in scope and not focused on a particular crisis or world region.

- Mary Gauvain explained that Division leadership was contacted by an Executive Committee member (E. Grigorenko) who works with this population. Division leadership is also concerned about broadening the effort and the hope is that what we are learning will enable this to occur. At present, we are learning how to coordinate with APA in such efforts as well as details about licensing, costs for certain assessment instruments and legal considerations, continuing education credit, and the translation and availability of resources.

- Growing Division Leaders
  - There was general discussion about how to bring young people into various leadership roles of the Division, which is critical to the Division’s future in APA and the profession at large.

- Role of Division 7 in APA
  - Members noted that there seems to be a growing interest in children and youth as a topic at the Convention
  - Many members expressed the view that the Division should have a stronger role in this activity, especially in areas of basic and translational research relevant to assessment and prevention

- Current Role of Professional Societies for Division Members and Developmental Science at large
  - As we shift the generation of leadership, members see it as important to articulate Division activities and goals for our members and potential members as well as in relation to the profession at large

- Meeting plans for 2023 in Washington DC are underway
